Common Core State Standards

Cash-strapped states were bribed using funds from the stimulus to adopt an untested new educational reform

Common Core rips control of academic standards away from local and state control

No state legislators reviewed, debated or voted for Common Core

Common Core is trademarked and owned by private corporations and trade organizations

The standards are controversial and several of the original validators refused to sign-off on the final draft

The estimated adoption cost to Illinois taxpayers is $733 million but will probably be much more

State Longitudinal Data Collection

FERPA student privacy laws were quietly loosened without Congressional consent

New data can include mental health, religious and political affiliation, household income and other personal demographics

The data will be managed by inBloom; a private corporation financed by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and a variety of partners

Data will be stored in the Amazon cloud – a cloud that has already been hacked

Data will be shared with third party apps as well as research firms via the Internet

You will not know who is accessing which student data
